bm, 2005Efficient Trim Arrays for Cervical Cancer Screening. The combination of human papillomavirus (HPV) testing and cytology has been established as a highly sensitive and cost-effective screening test for cervical cancer. One limitation of these screening methods is their sensitivity to low-grade lesions, which can be missed. Using a dual-element array as a screening test may increase the sensitivity for low-grade lesions. Herein we report on the sensitivity, specificity, positive and negative predictive values of a triplex array designed to simultaneously test HPV types 16, 18, and 45 using ISH and P16 protein staining. This array is compared to Pap and HPV-ISH using HPV-ISH positive tissue, HPV-ISH negative tissue, and Pap negative tissue as a training set. Triplex testing with the triplex array is more sensitive than Pap testing at all cervical intraepithelial neoplasia (CIN) grades and more specific than HPV-ISH at all CIN grades. Moreover, the triplex array is more sensitive than HPV-ISH for the detection of invasive cancer. The triplex array for HPV-ISH-ISH triplex array has the potential to improve cervical cancer screening. David S. Sheff David S.
